They were hysterical when the police broke down their door, and they fought like ought to be left here to settle the judgmaniacs against being carried out in ment, their nightgowns. What clothing they had on was almost torn to shreds by their struggles as the policemen in desperation finally picked them up in their arms and carried them downstairs and into Shanley"s restaurant, a few doors above.

There was the same trouble all over again when Policeman Chave attempted to rescue Miss Julie Dumas, a manicure, who lived on the third floor. He didn't argue with her, but picked her up in his arms and started down the smoke-filled stairway. Half-way down she remembered she had not taken her purse, and she put up such a fight against being rescued without it that the big policeman carried her upstairs again and let her get her treas-upstairs again and let her get her treasure bag from under her deserted pillow. She then joined the nightgown colony at Shafley's.

On the top noor lived the Jensen brothers and five of their employees. They were awakened by the policeman, but before they could get down the stairway the flames had crept up an areaway and mushroomed out in the rear of the fourth floor, driving them to the front windows, from which they were taken down by the firemen.

The fire cleaned out the basement and first floor. The damage was $3,500.

A REAL NEW YORK BOY AND GIRL WHOM NO ONE HAS EVER SEEN.

TO-MORROW'S SUNDAY WORLD takes two pages to tell about them. Read the article yourself and then you will understand the mystery.

But that is only one feature of a dozen that even, a thirty-five-cent magazine would be glad to advertise. Here, for instance, are some of the contributors:

RICHARD HARDING DAVIS,

Who writes a farewell to Charles Dana Gibson, who is going to forsake the Gibson Girl.

REV. THOMAS R. SLICER, D.D.,

Who tells in terse, forceful language what this year's cost of racing has been.

O. HENRY,

Who some people think writes better short stories

LILLIAN RUSSELL.

Who gives a signed description of the costliest gown

Who has her own clever way of viewing New York life on a school where there are twenty - two

IZOLA FORRESTER,

Who is well known as a writer of fiction, has a clever lay sermon on "The Boy Who Got There."

RUTH EARLE,

A clever newcomer to newspaper work, who breezily tells "Why I Didn't Get On the Stage."

PAUL WEST,

Author of children's stories and a successful playwright, is represented by a bedtime stary, "The Little Boy That Grew."

MARGARET HUBBARD AYER,

Who writes entertainingly on "Talking as a Wasteful Dissipation.

There is novelty, too, in TO-MORROW'S SUN-DAY WORLD. Think of this, for instance:
